The Nature of Running

SPRING / SUMMER CANADA 2024

SINCE 1898

1898 OUR LEGACY: BORN TO RUN

Saucony was founded in 1898 as a traditional leather shoe manufacturing company. With over a century of running in our blood, we've evolved from a local factory to a global brand in the suburbs of Boston, inspiring good runs worldwide.

1960s

Saucony is acquired by parent company Hyde in 1960. In the mid 60s, Hyde received a top-secret contract to produce shoes for NASA space missions, including for Ed White, the first American to walk in space as part of Gemini IV. Saucony would go on to produce footwear for other missions throughout the 60s including Apollo7.

Rod Dixon wasn't satisfied until we put a mattress, a window and a trampoline in these shoes.

When Rod Dixon set out to create the best running shoe in the world, he didn't just want a shoe. He wanted a shoe that would give him the same feeling as a mattress, a window and a trampoline. He wanted a shoe that would give him the same feeling as a mattress, a window and a trampoline. He wanted a shoe that would give him the same feeling as a mattress, a window and a trampoline.

DXN TRAINER

New Zealand elite runner Rod Dixon, who won bronze in the 1500m at the 1972 Summer Games wins the NYC Marathon wearing Saucony and the DXN line is born. With Achilles-relieving collapsible back tabs and metatarsal-protecting inserts, D-ring lacing and a variety of experimental tread patterns, the DXN trainer cleared the path for Saucony's legacy in innovation, thanks to an EVA midsole wedge with drilled out holes that enhanced cushioning and would be a pre-cursor to the impending GRID technology of the 90s.

Our Shadow proves the theory of evolution.

Running has come a long way in the last quarter of a million years. First someone got the bright idea to run on two feet instead of four. About 240,000 years later came the first shoes. Then Saucony developed the Jazz and Freedom Trainer and something called the "Saucony feel" was born. Now comes the Saucony Shadow. Its outsole evolved from the Jazz. So it retained the same cushioning ability, while adding reinforced rubber around the edge for longer wear and better support. The midsole grew from the Freedom Trainer, with the addition of a motion controller and shank insert for torsional stability. And, to insure its survival at night, we've covered the heel counter with 3M Scotchlite reflective tape and a protective black double screen. It's a shoe Charles Darwin would have loved. Because it's probably the most comfortable argument anyone's ever made for evolution.

1985 SHADOW

The Shadow arrives, boasting 3M reflectivity, motion control devices and shank inserts above Jazz-inspired outsoles. The Shadow was a significant breakthrough that would continue to evolve over the next decade and now lives on as part of the Saucony Originals line.

1988 AZURA

The perfect blend of high-performance construction and late-80s style, the Azura offered the pinnacle of contemporary tech and unparalleled lightweight comfort, without sacrificing stability and support. The Azura's innovation highlights were the new Torsional Rigidity Bar (TRB) and Stabil Wrap. Constructed from heat-resistant Kevlar sourced from the aviation industry and Formula 1 racing, the TRB provided support, dispersed shock, and increased energy return, while the Stabil Wrap componentry extended laterally to the forefoot for support and control.

1991

G.R.I.D. technology is released. An acronym for "Ground Reaction Inertia Device," this new technology was inspired by a tennis racquet and took three years and a significant investment to bring to market. Strands of Hytrel were criss-crossed and coupled with a sphere that acted as a stability mechanism. This GRID "cassette" was then embedded in an EVA midsole — a successful combination of both cushioning and stability during a time where one but not both were available in footwear. Saucony designers continued to experiment with GRID technology into the late 90s, including the debut of 3D GRID technology in 1997, the GRID Hurricane and an entire GRID-infused range for women's feet such as the GRID Phenom, GRID Palladium, and GRID Essence.

G.R.I.D

2010 KINVARA

Inspired by the Tarahumara runners of Mexico and the barefoot running movement they inspired, the Kinvara was the first major running model to utilize an almost horizontal 4mm heel-to-toe drop.

2020 ENDORPHIN

Powered by SPEEDROLL Technology, the Endorphin family launches in 2020, engineered to provide an effortless, always-forward motion. Saucony makes its foray into carbon-plated shoes with the launch of Endorphin Pro, the development of which Saucony athlete Jared Ward was active in. Currently in its 4th generation, the Endorphin family includes the Endorphin Pro 4, Endorphin Speed 4, Endorphin Rift, Endorphin Elite which launched in 2023 as well as the Endorphin Edge, a trail shoe which launched in Fall 2022 featuring the same proprietary SPEEDROLL technology along with a Carbitex™ MonoFlex carbon-fiber plate for a fast push off and stable landing.
